SHORT CV OF THE SUPERVISOR

PhD in History (1993). Visiting scholar at UCLA and visiting professor at Sabanci University (Istanbul), he has been a researcher at Universidad Carlos III de Madrid, Universidad Autónoma de Madrid and Universidad del País Vasco in Spain. His topics of research deal with historicizing and contextualizing the rise of collective identities around social and political conflicts and from a methodology profiting from conceptual history and social psychology. He has extendedly worked on the building of citizenship in modern Spain in comparative perspective and has also a record of publications on memory studies and historiography.

PROJECT TITLE AND SHORT DESCRIPTION

The representation of commerce in the Iberian world, 17th-19th centuries

The project studies the transformations in the representation of commerce (social, political and cultural) throughout the 18th century in Spain and Portugal and their colonies: its conceptual and semantics foundations, its main landmarks in discourse and its consequences for the self-image of merchants within the estate society, their individual and collective identity, and their shifting status in the Old Regime.
